Greetings!

Will I Get More Alimony If My Ex-Spouse Cheated On Me?

Most states nowadays have implemented no-fault divorces in which a party seeking a divorce need not provide a reason for ending the marriage other than that the marriage has been permanently broken. Georgia, on the other hand, still have fault-based divorces in which a party seeking to end a marriage can state the grounds or reasons for the divorce. One of the most common ground for a fault-based divorce is often adultery.

In Georgia, if a spouse committed adultery, and . . . click HERE to read more.

7 Tips to Managing the Holidays Post-Divorce:

1. If you have children; make sure your holiday parenting plan is in place well ahead of time:

Ensuring that both you and your ex-spouse are on the same page with the children's schedule will reduce a lot of stress and heated emotions during the holidays.

2. Spend time with your family:

Be intentional about spending some time with your family - whether it's with your children, your own siblings, your parents, or your close friends. Having a strong family support system always makes the holidays more enjoyable.

3. Create new traditions:

The holidays are a good time to start new traditions. It creates a sense of belonging and family. If you have kids, let them be involved in deciding what you are going to do.

4. Do something for others:

There are so many ways to serve others and so many people in need. Find a local event or charity to participate in and get involved. Take any anxiety or sadness you have about the holidays and turn it into something positive.

5. Do something for yourself:

Everyone deserves a little pampering. Schedule a massage. Go out for a nice meal. Do something you enjoy!

6. Do not make any major decisions:

Holidays often bring with them a lot of emotions. Making a major decision in the midst of that emotion may not be the best thing for you and your family. If it's something that can wait until next year, then let it.

7. Acknowledge your feelings and losses:

There is nothing wrong with feeling sad or angry or lonely during the holidays. If it's your first holiday after the divorce, you are going to feel moments of grief over what you have lost. That is okay. It's important is to feel those feelings but not get lost in them. This is why it's so important to stay connected with loved ones during the holiday. Don't be afraid to lean on them for support.

Happy Veterans Day!

Thank you to all the veterans who have so bravely defended our country both domestically and on foreign soil. One day a year is not enough recognition for the sacrifice that you and your families have made for our country. Know that we are thankful everyday for your service and sacrifice!

Giving Thanks!

Thanksgiving is the time of year where people give thanks for the blessings in their life. This is a good opportunity to reframe our current circumstances and remember what those blessings are. This one simple act often gives us the perspective we need to see what a happy future we have to look forward to even during a trying time in our life like divorce.

At the Atlanta Divorce Law Group, we're thankful for the opportunity to serve our clients and help them figure out what their own Happily Ever After looks like.
